Dear Mr Bieber,

We are writing this letter to you because in one of your songs (where the lyrics go 'if I was your boyfriend') is grammatically incorrect.

In the song where you sing 'if I was your boyfriend', is grammatically incorrect because you are singing incorrect subjunctive form. If you didn't know what a subjunctive form is, here is the meaning, there is one where you wish something, for example, 'if I were rich'. There is another one as well, it is an infinitive (I think), here is an example. I recommend that she listens.

I would say that you should re-record the song, and use the subjunctive form correctly. The lyrics 'if I was your boyfriend' would be changed to 'if I were your boyfriend'. If you listen to Beyonce, she sings her songs grammatically correct.

Yours faithfully,

Mr E Darguzis

Dear Mr Bieber,

I am writing to inform you that your song name

'If I Was Your Boyfriend' is grammatically incorrect and that you should rerecord it. The line that is not correct, is the name of your song,

I insist that you learn your subjunctive form, as the correct phrase is if I were your boyfriend.

Surely your manager should of known it was wrong, but no, he also needs to get back to school! You need to listen to Beyonce, as her song 'If I were a boy' is grammatically correct. // If I were you, I would be ashamed of myself, getting a letter from an eleven-year-old who has some knowledge (unlike you.) I command that you - Mr Bieber - search subjective forms on youtube and realize ^{silly} the mistake you have made. ^{I am} As being nice here, I have gave you a warning for your ~~up~~ ~~up-repairing~~ ~~songs~~ not to be humiliated by other eleven-year-olds!

- Yours faithfully

Lois
